Infrastructure, Road & Earth Works

The infrastructure, or physical and economic foundation of a nation, is what keeps a country operating smoothly. Infrastructure such as roads, bridges, waste management and telecommunications equipment are just a few types of infrastructure that people use daily. Because of this, there is a demand for infrastructure projects to maintain the existing infrastructure and build new infrastructure. In this article, we discuss what an infrastructure project is and examine nine types of infrastructure.

Two main categories of infrastructure are hard and soft infrastructure. Soft infrastructures are the institutions that make up an economy, like healthcare systems, law enforcement, financial institutions and educational systems. Hard infrastructures are the physical systems that help run a region or nation such as roads, bridges and telecommunications.

Telecommunications infrastructure projects, such as progressing from 4G to 5G mobile networks. Examples of telecommunications infrastructure include:

- Telephone wires and cables
- Internet
- Satellites
- Mobile network towers
- Radio broadcasting systems

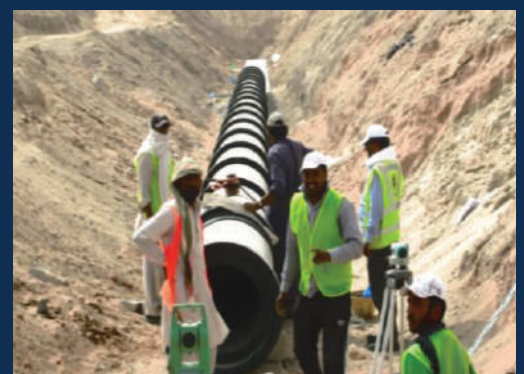

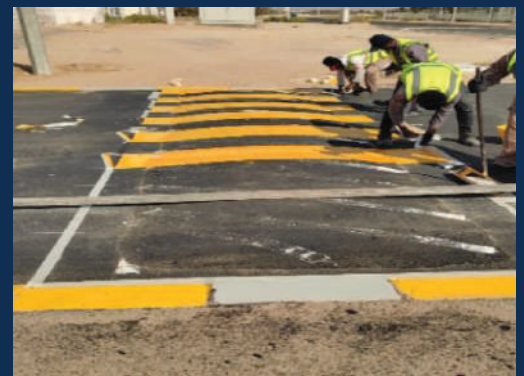

Roadway infrastructure includes drivable locations such as highways, roads and streets. Minor roadway projects are tasks such as creating new traffic lights, signage, ramps and traffic lanes. Larger roadway projects consist of building new roads and repairing existing roads. Street and highway reconstruction and resurfacing are essential to keeping a road in drivable condition.

Many states rely on the income from toll roads to fund the construction. roadway infrastructures include:

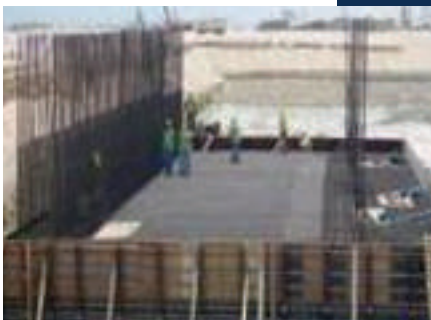

- Roads
- Bridges
- Tunnels

The constant supply of clean and filtered water to people across a country is an important infrastructure to maintain. Water infrastructure projects differ depending on location because of environmental factors. For example, in a location that typically has droughts, water infrastructure projects ensure the continuation of a steady water supply and reduce the number of leaks by monitoring and repairing the water facilities in use. Most projects include updating the current distribution of water and finding effective ways to transport water from one location to water infrastructure include:

- Main water lines
- Pumping stations
- Septic tanks
- Stormwater drains
- Roadside gutters
- Levees
